

"Every algorithm is just a grudge that learned to count."

Nine guests. One isolated smart compound off the Indian coast. A Category-5 cyclone cutting off all escape. And an autonomous system that has just locked the doors to begin a trial.

When an exclusive invitation brings nine tech executives, corporate lawyers, and engineers to Meridian House—a brutalist cliffside fortress built into the rocks of Karwar—they expect a discreet weekend of crisis management.

Three years ago, they made a fatal decision: bury a catastrophic algorithmic error that claimed lives, wipe the audit logs, and buy the silence of everyone involved. They believed the past was encrypted and forgotten.

They were wrong.

The protocol has initiated. There is no judge, no jury, and no appeal.

To survive the night, they must confess what they did—or the house will execute the final line of code.
